Cashmere

The luxurious softness of cashmere Loro Piana upholsters the Boheme collection.

Cashmere is a textile fiber obtained from the Hircus goat, living in Asian mountain regions and plateaus. The word Cashmere derives from the Indian region of Kashmir, from where this fiber has been exported to Europe since the beginning of the nineteenth century. Today only small quantities are produced in the Indian region of Kashmir, while the largest producers are Tibet, Mongolia, China, Iran and Afghanistan. Cashmere is characterized by its soft, silky and velvety fibers. It is noted as providing a natural light-weight insulation without bulk. The goats produce a double fleece consisting of the fine, soft undercoat or underdown of hair mingled with a straighter and much coarser outer coating of hair called Guard Hair. The grow of undercoat is associated with the particular climatic conditions and drastic changes in temperature between day and night in these areas. More than all animal fibers, this hair is able to thermo-regulate the body of the animal, protecting it both from low and from high temperatures. Cashmere is collected during the spring moulting season when the goats naturally shed their winter coat. The mixed mass of down and coarse hair is removed by hand with a coarse comb. It is estimated that on average yearly production per goat is 100-200 grams.

Mother-of-pearl

5 special mother-of-pearls, from 5 different areas of the world, embellish the inlays of the Hermes collection.

Mother-of-pearl is a precious material produced by some mollusks, especially oysters, as an inner shell layer. It has usually an iridescent pearl white colour. Due to its hardness, it is used in the production of various objects and for the decoration of certain surfaces. The most valuable mother-of-pearl comes from the East Indies, Indian Ocean and Red Sea. Depending on the origin its colour may vary from classic white shade to grey or yellow shades. In the colonial period, the port of Massawa in Eritrea was the main market of the Red Sea for this product, which was mainly exported to France and Italy. Mother-of-pearl was and is still used for the creation of inlay designs on furniture, especially during the Renaissance period, as well as for jewelry, cutlery, buttons, mosaics, fans, binoculars, keys for musical instruments. Mother-of-pearl is composed of hexagonal platelets of aragonite (calcium carbonate crystals) arranged in a continuous parallel lamina. These layers are separated by sheets of organic matrix composed of elastic biopolymers.

Jumbo Collection divisions

Jumbo Collection is made up of 3 different and complementary divisions:

– luxury furniture division

– kitchen division

– contract division

with the intent to go beyond the simple supply of furniture, so as to propose a total housing taste, a Jumbo concept, to define a unique and distinctive atmosphere.

Jumbo Collection

luxurious furniture division

The Luxurious Furniture division proposes collections comparing themselves with a wide horizon of tastes, to offer a wrapping sense of luxury and prestige. Hallmarks typical of the 'Italianism' of collections appear in the extreme attention to details, in the constant search for highest-quality materials, in the greatest care of finishes, fabrics, trimmings, in the bold formal research oriented to an unconventional creativity. The principle of originality of a piece drives the work on volumes, on the combination of materials and on the opportunity to change radically the impact of each proposal, also through a careful use of decoration and finishing.

Jumbo Collection kitchen division

JKC kitchens are designed following the style of Jumbo Collection dining rooms and are therefore made in a neoclassical style incorporating elements of different decorative inspiration, from Empire to Louis XVI style.

Each component is individually designed according to a specific project in order to maximize the available space and obtain a unique and customized design.

All kitchens are produced with the most advanced materials: structures in marine multilayer wood suitable for damp rooms, varnishes resistant to wear, heat and humidity, technological appliances of the most prestigious brands.

Jumbo Collection

contract division

The Contract Division was established following the rising need of clients to be assisted and guided, not only in the choice of furniture, but also in the global design of rooms, that should express the appeal and seduction of a unique and distinctive style. This branch also offers the market a line of house complements, such as doors, stair banisters, boiserie and wooden ceilings. Step by step, from first inspection in the building yard until inaugural toast in the new house, we attend customers, who choose a "global" service.
